MERIT SYSTEMS PROTECTION BOARD

Mission Performance, Employee Protections, and Working Environment

General Government Division

B-249151

August 15, 1995

The Honorable John Glenn
Ranking Minority Member Committee on Governmental Affairs
United States Senate

Dear Senator Glenn:

This report responds to your request that we examine certain aspects of the Merit Systems Protection Board's (MSPB) performance, management, and operations in light of the critical role it plays as a protector of the federal merit employment system. Specifically, you asked us to:

- assess whether MSPB, through its appeals process, is accomplishing its statutory mission to protect federal employees against prohibited personnel practices and abusive personnel decisions and whether MSPB is abiding by its own guidelines in determining these cases in a fair and timely manner;
- determine what accountability mechanisms MSPB has in place to provide its employees the merit system protections that MSPB was created to uphold; and
- identify what actions MSPB has taken, and the extent to which it has been successful, in fostering "an environment of trust, respect, and fairness," as called for in its 1992 vision statement pledge to "promote and protect, by deed and example," federal merit employment principles.

Your request noted that effective oversight of MSPB is particularly important and that confirmation of MSPB's current chairman (sworn in on July 2, 1993) made it a good time for our examination of MSPB to take place. However, because the current chairman had only recently taken office when our work began in November 1993, the data we collected necessarily covered both the early part of his tenure and the latter part of his predecessor's.

Background

MSPB is an independent, quasijudicial executive agency created by the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978. Its mission is to ensure that (1) federal employees are protected against abuses by their agencies' management, (2) executive branch agencies make employment decisions in accordance with merit system principles, and (3) federal merit systems are kept free of prohibited personnel practices.

In large part, MSPB is to pursue its mission by hearing and deciding appeals by federal employees of actions taken against them by their agencies. Initially, an employee files his or her appeal at one of MSPB's regional or field offices. The appeal is then to be heard and decided by an administrative judge. The decision becomes final in 35 days unless one of the parties to the appeal files a petition for review to the board members or MSPB reopens the appeal on its own motion. In such cases, the petition for review is to be processed at MSPB headquarters. The board members' decision constitutes the final administrative action unless the appeal involves allegations of discrimination, in which case the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission may become involved. An employee who is dissatisfied with the board members' final decision may appeal it to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit or, if allegations of discrimination are involved, bring the case before a U.S. district court.

MSPB's three-member bipartisan Board consists of a chairman, a vice chairman, and a member, all of whom are appointed by the president with the advice and consent of the Senate to serve overlapping, nonrenewable 7-year terms.

MSPB's fiscal year 1994 appropriation was $24.7 million. As of the end of fiscal year 1994, it had 289 employees. Under Public Law 103-424, signed by the president on October 29, 1994, MSPB was reauthorized for a period of 3 years.

Results in Brief

Based on practitioners' views of the appeals process and on the high rate at which the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has affirmed MSPB's final decisions, MSPB is generally accomplishing its statutory mission. In three of the five practitioner groups we surveyed—agency general counsels, agency attorneys and representatives, and agency employee and labor-management relations representatives—from 83 to 89 percent of the respondents expressed opinions that MSPB has been very or generally successful in accomplishing its mission, while from 0 to 2 percent indicated that it has been very or generally unsuccessful. In the remaining two practitioner groups, 46 percent of the private attorneys and 45 percent of the union officials expressed opinions that MSPB has been very or generally successful; 25 percent of the attorneys and 23 percent of the union officials indicated that it has been very or generally unsuccessful.

The responses from the practitioner groups reflect a general view that MSPB has been fair in processing employee appeals of agency personnel actions. MSPB's fairness in processing employee appeals was further indicated by the fact that over the 4-year period ending September 1994, 91 percent of the final MSPB decisions appealed to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit were upheld; the remainder were either reversed or returned to MSPB for further action.

Regarding the timely processing of appeals, over the 4-year period ending September 1994, the regional offices almost always met MSPB's self-imposed 120-day case processing guideline (96 percent in fiscal year 1994). Headquarters met management's 110-day guideline less often (61 percent in fiscal year 1994), but its performance in this regard had improved from fiscal years 1991 to 1993. To explain the fact that headquarters met its case processing guideline less often than the regional offices, an MSPB official cited the complexity of cases reaching the petition-for-review stage and the fact that individual cases may have been kept pending for various reasons. Moreover, according to MSPB's chairman, management imposed the 110-day guideline at headquarters as a goal to strive toward rather than as a hard and fast requirement for headquarters staff.

MSPB has established accountability mechanisms in the form of policies, procedures, and processes to protect its employees against workplace discrimination, mismanagement, abuse, and improper personnel practices.<sup>1</sup> To protect its employees against workplace discrimination, MSPB has established an equal employment opportunity (EEO) policy and has taken various actions to implement it, such as providing EEO training opportunities to its supervisors, managers, and EEO staff and recently instituting an individual performance evaluation element for diversity. Further, MSPB has established procedures for handling EEO complaints and has made employees aware of their rights under these procedures.

In February 1994, MSPB abolished its nonstatutory Office of the Inspector General (OIG) because of management's concerns about its effectiveness and efficiency. To provide MSPB employees with an avenue for reporting their concerns should they become aware of mismanagement, abuse, or improper personnel practices, MSPB arranged for hotline and investigative services through the U.S. Department of Agriculture's (USDA) Inspector General. MSPB also has transferred its OIG internal oversight functions to its

Office of the General Counsel (OGC). MSPB's arrangements for carrying out these activities are comparable to those of the 10 other federal entities we studied;<sup>2</sup> if these arrangements are implemented as planned, MSPB should be able to comply with federal audit and investigative requirements. However, because these arrangements have not been operational very long, it is too early to tell how effective they will be.

Despite MSPB's provisions for the protection of its employees against workplace discrimination, mismanagement, abuse, and improper personnel practices, about two-fifths of the employees responding to our survey indicated they would be reluctant to become involved in the process for handling EEO complaints. Slightly over one-half of the respondents indicated they would be reluctant to report allegations of wrongdoing. Also, while almost two-thirds of the respondents described the work environment at MSPB as impartial, nearly one-fourth of the respondents—mostly women and minorities—described it as discriminatory. Although these responses represent perceptions rather than proof of discrimination or indicators of wrongdoing going unreported, we believe the perceptions are held by a large enough portion of MSPB's workforce to be of concern to MSPB, especially in light of its role as protector of the merit system and the standard it set for itself in its 1992 vision statement, "To promote and protect, by deed and example, the Federal merit principles in an environment of trust, respect and fairness."

MSPB officials said that since the agency announced its vision statement in November 1992, it has taken a variety of actions to foster an environment of trust, respect, and fairness. But while 29 percent of survey respondents felt MSPB has been successful in fostering such an environment, 39 percent felt it has been unsuccessful. MSPB officials believe these responses may have been affected by the uncertainties associated with the arrival of a new chairman and management's ensuing efforts to reorganize and reengineer agency operations.

MSPB employees' views of their work environment are somewhat similar to those of federal employees in general. The Office of Personnel Management's (OPM) 1992 survey of nearly 57,000 federal employees showed that while 44 percent expressed confidence and trust in their organizations, 26 percent did not; and while 30 percent believed their organizations treated all employees equally, regardless of position or rank, 47 percent did not.

Scope and Methodology

To assess whether MSPB is accomplishing its statutory mission through the appeals process in a fair and timely manner, we developed a mail questionnaire to obtain the views of practitioners who had represented federal employees or agencies before MSPB during the 2-year period ending September 1993 (see app. I). The results of our survey can be projected to the populations from which the survey respondents were selected. We analyzed MSPB's case processing performance reports to determine whether MSPB met its case processing guidelines at the regional and headquarters levels in fiscal years 1991 through 1994. Additionally, we analyzed data on the extent to which MSPB's final decisions were appealed to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit and the court's disposition of these appeals.

To determine what accountability mechanisms MSPB had in place to provide its employees the merit system protections that MSPB was created to uphold, we reviewed the agency's EEO and internal oversight activities designed to protect its employees against workplace discrimination, mismanagement, abuse, and improper personnel practices. In doing so, we reviewed MSPB's EEO policy, procedures, and processes and compared its provisions for internal oversight to those of 10 other federal entities that are roughly comparable to MSPB in budget and staff size. Further, we developed and mailed a questionnaire to all MSPB employees as of May 12, 1994, asking for their views on selected aspects of the agency's EEO operations and internal oversight activities (see app. II).

To determine what actions MSPB had taken to foster a work environment that is based on trust, respect, and fairness, we interviewed MSPB's Chief Operating Officer, EEO director, and members of a task force charged with proposing actions for implementing MSPB's 1992 vision statement. Further, our MSPB employee questionnaire asked employees for their views on how successful their agencies had been in fostering such an environment (see app. II). We compared MSPB employees' views of their work environment to those reported by federal employees in a 1992 OPM governmentwide survey.

More information on our scope and methodology is presented in appendix III.

MSPB’s chairman provided us written comments on a draft of this report by letter dated July 14, 1995. A summary of his comments is presented on page 19, and they are reprinted in their entirety in appendix VI.

We did our review between November 1993 and January 1995. It was done in the Washington, D.C., area in accordance with generally accepted government auditing standards.

MSPB Is Generally Accomplishing Its Statutory Mission

In each of the practitioner groups we surveyed, the percentage of respondents who expressed the opinion that MSPB has been successful in accomplishing its mission was higher than the percentage who indicated that it has not been successful. As shown in table 1, the percentages varied among the practitioner groups. For example, the responses from agency general counsels were the most favorable: 89 percent of the general counsels responding to our survey believed MSPB has been very or generally successful in accomplishing its mission; none of these respondents believed MSPB has been very or generally unsuccessful. By comparison, the responses from union officials were the least favorable: 45 percent of the union officials expressing an opinion indicated that MSPB has been very or generally successful in accomplishing its mission, while 23 percent indicated that it has been very or generally unsuccessful.

Table 1: Participants’ Opinions on How Successful MSPB Has Been in Accomplishing Its Mission Through the Appeals Process

The responses from the practitioner groups reflect a general view that MSPB has been fair in processing federal employee appeals at the regional and headquarters levels. As shown in table 2, the percentage of respondents who indicated that MSPB's appellate process at the regional level was almost always or generally fair ranged from a high of 93 percent among agency general counsels to a low of 59 percent among union officials. The percentage of respondents who viewed the process at the regional level as very or generally unfair ranged from a low of 0 percent among agency general counsels and employee and labor-management relations representatives to a high of 26 percent among union officials.

As for the fairness of MSPB's appellate process at the headquarters level, table 3 shows that the percentage of respondents indicating that the process was almost always or generally fair ranged from a high of 95 percent among employee and labor-management relations representatives to a low of 46 percent among private attorneys. The percentage of respondents indicating that the appellate process at the headquarters level was very or generally unfair ranged from a low of 0 percent among agency general counsels to a high of 29 percent among private attorneys.

Another measure of MSPB's fairness in processing employee appeals is the rate at which the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has affirmed MSPB's final decisions. As shown in table 4, during the 4-year period ending September 1994, 1,422 MSPB final decisions were appealed to the court and adjudicated on the merits. Of that amount, 1,287 cases (91 percent) were affirmed, while 116 cases (8 percent) were either reversed (3 percent) or remanded (5 percent) to MSPB for further processing.

According to a recognized expert on the administrative redress system for federal employees, the affirmation rate of MSPB's decisions by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit is much higher than the rate at which other federal circuits affirm the decisions of other federal administrative tribunals.<sup>3</sup>

Guidelines for the length of time MSPB should take to process cases differ at the regional and headquarters levels. Guidelines at the regional level stipulate that cases be processed in no more than 120 days. This guideline was imposed by MSPB itself and is identical to the time limit in the statute (5 U.S.C. 7702(a)(1)) requiring MSPB to decide appeals that involve allegations of discrimination within 120 days of the filing of the appeal. At the headquarters level, cases are to be processed within 110 days. This guideline also is self-imposed; the chairman explained that the 110-day guideline at the headquarters level represents a goal to strive toward rather than a hard and fast requirement for processing petitions for review

(PFR). Further, MSPB's written policy states that "it will attempt to complete action on petitions for review of initial decisions within 110 days."

Over the 4-year period ending September 1994, the regional offices took an average of 78 days to process initial employee appeals and almost always met their 120-day case processing guideline. Most survey respondents were either very satisfied or generally satisfied with the actual amount of time MSPB took to process cases at the regional level (see app. I, question 22). Satisfaction with actual processing time ranged from 87 percent for employee and labor-management relations representatives to 67 percent for agency general counsels. Dissatisfaction with processing time among the five practitioner groups ranged from a high of 18 percent for agency general counsels to a low of 7 percent for agency attorneys and representatives. As shown in table 5, of the initial appeals processed at the regional office level in fiscal years 1991 through 1994, 3 percent, on average, were not processed within the 120-day guideline.

During the same 4-year period, headquarters took an average of 170 days to process PFR cases. Although headquarters met its guideline less often than the regional offices met theirs, its processing time had been improving until fiscal year 1994. Most survey respondents were very or generally satisfied with the actual processing time at headquarters (see app. I, question 26). Satisfaction with actual processing time ranged from 68 percent for the agency attorneys and representatives to 44 percent for agency general counsels. Dissatisfaction among the five practitioner groups with actual processing time at the headquarters level ranged from a high of 31 percent for private attorneys and agency general counsels to a low of 20 percent for agency attorneys and representatives. As shown in table 6, the percentage of PFR cases processed within the 110-day guideline at the headquarters level over the 4-year period steadily increased from 52 percent in fiscal year 1991 to 78 percent in fiscal year 1993, but it dropped to 61 percent in fiscal year 1994.

According to an MSPB headquarters official, the decline during 1994 in the percentage of PFR cases decided within 110 days was caused by an increase in workload due to Postal Service reorganization cases.<sup>4</sup> Also, the chairman cited two additional reasons for the drop in the fiscal year 1994 PFR processing time: a conscious effort by headquarters to reduce the backlog of PFR cases over 1 year old and a decrease in staff occurring simultaneously with an increase in PFR caseload.

In explaining the generally longer headquarters processing times, an MSPB official cited the complexity of cases reaching the PFR stage and the fact that individual cases may have been kept pending for various reasons, such as related cases being held to allow MSPB to decide a lead case. Also, cases have been held because they involved issues under consideration by the courts or because the contending parties failed to provide necessary information within the 110-day period. Further, according to the MSPB official, complex cases occasionally take more than 110 days because they require more time for research, analysis, and drafting, and for a majority of the board members to agree on a decision.

<sup>4</sup>In effecting a major restructuring in late 1992, the U.S. Postal Service abolished thousands of management positions, moved several thousand employees to lower graded positions, and offered buyouts as an inducement to employees to retire. The Postal Service maintained that the restructuring was not a reduction in force and that personnel actions taken in the course of the restructuring, therefore, were not appealable to MSPB. By the end of fiscal year 1993, however, MSPB had received a total of 277 appeals of actions resulting from the Postal Service reorganization.

MSPB recently expanded its commitment to improving the appellate process by further encouraging the settlement of appeals. In June 1994, in accordance with National Performance Review (NPR) recommendations encouraging the use of alternative dispute resolution techniques, MSPB established a program to help parties resolve their disputes at the PFR level. From June 1994 through the end of September 1994, MSPB headquarters settlement attorneys attempted to settle 52 cases and succeeded in settling 17 cases—a success rate of 33 percent. MSPB is considering doing a comprehensive assessment of the PFR settlement program after more time has passed.

MSPB Has EEO and Internal Oversight Processes to Protect Its Employees, but Some Employees Expressed Concerns About Participating in These Processes

MSPB has established accountability mechanisms in the form of policies, procedures, and processes to protect its employees against workplace discrimination, mismanagement, abuse, and improper personnel practices. MSPB has established an EEO policy and has taken various actions to implement it. The agency also has established new internal oversight arrangements in lieu of the nonstatutory OIG it abolished in February 1994. Despite these actions, a substantial number of employees expressed concerns about participating in the processes for handling EEO complaints and for reporting allegations of wrongdoing.

MSPB's EEO Policy and Its Implementation

MSPB's EEO policy is to provide equal opportunity to all persons and to prohibit discrimination because of race, color, sex, age, religion, national origin, or handicapping condition. In addition, its written policy prohibits reprisals against individuals who file a discrimination complaint; testify, assist, or participate in any manner in an investigation, proceeding, or hearing; or oppose a practice prohibited by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, the Equal Pay Act, or the Rehabilitation Act. To facilitate implementation of its EEO policy, MSPB has (1) provided EEO training opportunities to supervisors, managers, and EEO staff; (2) evaluated supervisors and managers and rewarded some for their EEO performance; and (3) taken steps to inform employees about the EEO complaint process and their rights under it.

MSPB's EEO manual, distributed in April 1994, states that "as part of its commitment to equal opportunity in all management actions and decisions, training will be given to managers, supervisors and other personnel as a way of furthering EEO objectives." According to an MSPB official, all office directors, managers, and supervisors are responsible for identifying and obtaining the necessary EEO training for themselves, and the EEO director is responsible for ensuring that EEO counselors are knowledgeable of current federal EEO rules and regulations. MSPB training data provided to us showed that during the 2-year period ending September 1993, MSPB managers and supervisors were provided opportunities for training and were encouraged to attend various internal and external EEO training courses. The MSPB training data also showed that 10 of MSPB's 21 EEO staff, which consists of 2 full-time staff and 19 collateral-duty staff (mostly EEO counselors) received some type of EEO training during the 2-year period.

In November 1993, the chairman informed MSPB employees of his strong commitment to diversity and equitable treatment in the workplace. To demonstrate his commitment, he established a new performance element under which to review and evaluate employees' performance in valuing and respecting diversity in the workplace. An MSPB official told us that top management takes its commitment to EEO very seriously, as demonstrated by the fact that only one MSPB manager has received an outstanding rating under the new performance element. MSPB's senior executives and other managers and supervisory employees are also evaluated on their adherence to EEO and affirmative action principles under the performance element on human resources management.

To reward EEO performance, MSPB established the Chairman's Award for Excellence in EEO. An employee is eligible for this award under eight criteria, one of them being whether his or her leadership in achieving EEO goals and objectives serves as a model for others. Since October 1990, three MSPB employees have received the award—one manager and one nonsupervisory employee in January 1992 and another manager in November 1994.

MSPB's EEO director told us that MSPB has taken various actions to communicate MSPB's EEO policy, program, and complaint process to employees and to make them aware of their EEO rights. For example, offices and employees were provided information on the names and locations of the agency's EEO counselors and special emphasis program managers and on the circumstances under which EEO counseling should be sought. Also, in April 1994, MSPB’s EEO manual was distributed to all MSPB offices for their employees’ reference and use. As shown in table 7, most of the survey respondents indicated that they had received or seen posted information that described MSPB’s EEO program, their EEO rights, and procedures for contacting MSPB’s EEO counselors; less than one-half of the respondents indicated that they had received or seen posted information that described the details of the EEO complaint process.

New Internal Oversight Policies and Procedures Recently Implemented

MSPB abolished its nonstatutory OIG in February 1994 because of concerns about its effectiveness and efficiency and in accordance with NPR’s governmentwide goal of streamlining agency operations. Since then, MSPB has assigned the former OIG’s internal oversight functions to its OGC. Also, to provide its employees with an avenue for reporting their concerns should they become aware of mismanagement, abuse, or improper personnel practices, MSPB has entered into an oral agreement with USDA’s Inspector General for hotline and investigative services.

MSPB’s OGC is responsible for planning and directing internal audits of MSPB’s programs and operations. However, OGC is to contract for the actual performance of the audits, either with other agencies through interagency agreements or with private firms. MSPB has contracted with a certified public accounting firm to help develop a 5-year audit plan and to establish procedures for handling the agency’s internal oversight functions. OGC also is responsible for arranging, as necessary, for investigations into allegations of wrongdoing and for coordinating the hotline and investigative services provided by USDA’s Inspector General. Any complaints or allegations received by USDA’s Inspector General hotline are to be forwarded to MSPB’s OGC for appropriate action. USDA’s Inspector

General has agreed to provide investigative services to MSPB on an as-needed basis. As of November 1994, USDA's OIG hotline had received two allegations; both allegations involved complaints about MSPB appellate decisions rather than instances of mismanagement, abuse, or improper personnel practices.

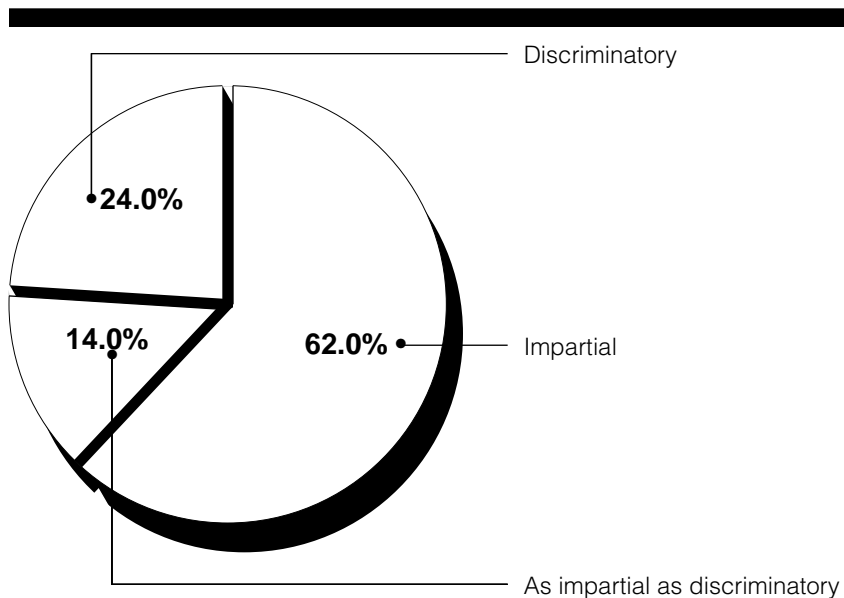

We found that by placing its oversight functions in a staff office in lieu of an OIG, MSPB is administering these functions in a manner comparable to those of 10 other federal entities we studied of roughly comparable budget and staff size (see app. IV). Like MSPB, 8 of the 10 federal entities we studied do not have their own audit or investigative offices but obtain audit or investigative services through contracts with private firms or agreements with other agencies' OIGs. Such arrangements do not ensure the same level of objectivity or independence as do statutory inspector general offices. However, if MSPB's arrangements are implemented as planned, MSPB should be able to comply with federal audit requirements set by the Office of Management and Budget and with investigative requirements set by the President's Council on Integrity and Efficiency. Since MSPB's arrangements are new, data on usage and results are not yet available, and it is too early to assess their effectiveness in ensuring that MSPB employees are provided an avenue for reporting their concerns should they become aware of mismanagement, abuse, or improper personnel practices.

Despite the provisions MSPB has made to protect its employees against workplace discrimination, mismanagement, abuse, and improper personnel practices, a sizeable portion of survey respondents indicated concerns about becoming involved in the processes established for handling EEO complaints and for reporting wrongdoing. About 40 percent of the respondents indicated they would be either uncertain about or unwilling to participate in EEO counseling or to file a formal EEO complaint if they felt they had been discriminated against; the most common reason was fear of reprisal (see app. II, questions 19 through 22). Fifty-one percent of the survey respondents indicated they would be either uncertain about or unwilling to report waste, fraud, abuse, or mismanagement of which they became aware; the most common reasons were a concern over maintaining anonymity and a fear of retaliation (see app. II, questions 24 and 25).

Most Employees Described the MSPB Workplace as Impartial, but Perceptions Varied Among Groups

As shown in figure 1, nearly two-thirds of the MSPB employees responding to our survey described the work environment as impartial. Nearly one-fourth of the respondents described it as discriminatory.

Note: The percentages are based on 221 respondents.

Source: GAO's Survey of U.S. MSPB Employees' Attitudes and Views About Their Work Environment.

More female (29 percent) than male (16 percent) employees and more minority (45 percent) than nonminority (18 percent) employees described their work environment as discriminatory (see figure V.1 in app. V). Overall, most survey respondents believed that they had been treated fairly regarding various employment and personnel decisions, such as job assignments and promotions (see table V.1 in app. V). However, more women, minorities, and nonattorneys believed they had been treated unfairly regarding such decisions (see tables V.2 through V.4 in app. V). Sixty-nine (29 percent) of the MSPB employees responding to our survey suggested various actions for MSPB top management to take to further promote an impartial work environment. Employees' suggestions generally related to promoting more diversity in management; treating everyone fairly; making promotion and hiring decisions only on the basis of merit and not on such factors as race, gender, or political affiliation; and providing counseling and training to supervisors who are repeatedly the subject of EEO complaints.

Regarding actual numbers of EEO cases, our analysis of MSPB data on the EEO complaint process showed that during the 5-year period ending September 1994, 34 employees received EEO counseling, and 10 employees filed a total of 21 formal EEO complaints. We have no basis on which to infer from these numbers the extent to which MSPB has been effective in establishing a fair and impartial workplace.

We recognize that the responses of MSPB employees to our survey represent perceptions rather than proven instances of discrimination or indicators of wrongdoing going unreported. Nevertheless, we believe the fact that, overall, 24 percent of MSPB employees view their workplace as discriminatory, and that 45 percent of the agency's minority employees concur, should be of concern to the agency because of (1) its role as protector of the merit system; and (2) the standard it set for itself in its 1992 vision statement, "To promote and protect, by deed and example, the Federal merit principles in an environment of trust, respect and fairness." We believe that in light of MSPB's mission and the standard adopted in its vision statement, it is important that MSPB's own employees feel confident that they are fairly treated regardless of their race, religion, color, sex, national origin, political affiliation, marital status, disability, or age.

Employees' Perceptions Varied Regarding MSPB's Efforts to Foster an Environment of Trust, Respect, and Fairness

In November 1992, MSPB announced as its vision, "To promote and protect, by deed and example, the Federal merit principles in an environment of trust, respect and fairness." Although the vision statement was developed and adopted prior to the current chairman's appointment, he supports it, according to MSPB officials. MSPB officials said that several actions have been taken to foster "an environment of trust, respect, and fairness." These actions have included the institution of a new performance element for valuing and respecting diversity in the workplace, various efforts to improve internal communication, and the involvement of employees in the decisionmaking process. Examples of these efforts include (1) featuring articles in MSPB's internal newsletter, News of Merit, that highlight various agency events; (2) cross-training employees within MSPB offices; (3) allowing employees to select award recipients; and (4) involving employees in the process for reengineering and reorganizing MSPB in response to NPR recommendations on streamlining agencies and empowering employees.

Twenty-nine percent of survey respondents expressed the belief that MSPB has been very successful or generally successful in fostering an environment of trust, respect, and fairness. But 39 percent, of whom disproportionate numbers were headquarters, women, and minority employees, expressed the belief that the agency has been generally unsuccessful or very unsuccessful. Respondents' perceptions of MSPB's success varied by duty station, gender, and minority or nonminority status (see figs. V.2 through V.4 in app. V).

MSPB believes that the staff's mixed perceptions of the agency's efforts to foster an environment of trust, respect, and fairness may have been affected by the uncertainties associated with the arrival of a new chairman, along with the staff's concerns over job security at a time when management was in the process of reorganizing and reengineering the agency's operations. However, an internal MSPB survey that was administered about 2 years prior to both our survey and MSPB's current reorganization efforts yielded similar results. Fifty percent of the respondents to MSPB's internal survey administered in February 1992 disagreed with the statement that "overall, the Board creates and fosters an environment of trust, respect, and fairness."

The views of MSPB employees in this regard are somewhat similar to those of federal employees in general. In OPM's 1992 survey of 56,767 federal employees, 44 percent of the respondents expressed confidence and trust in their organizations, but 26 percent did not. OPM's survey also showed that although 30 percent believed their organizations treated all employees equally regardless of position or rank, 47 percent did not. OPM's survey results demonstrate that other federal agencies, based on their employees' perceptions, have had mixed success in fostering trust and fairness in the workplace.

Nearly half (45 percent) of MSPB employees responding to our survey—including many who felt that MSPB has been successful in promoting an environment of trust, respect, and fairness—suggested actions for MSPB top management to take in this regard. The suggestions generally related to improving workplace communication and managerial decisionmaking about employment and resource matters, allowing employees to contribute to the decisionmaking process and involving staff at all levels, and treating staff equitably without regard to position or to minority or nonminority status. MSPB officials said that some of these suggestions correspond with actions already taken by management, and they are continuing to pursue them.

Conclusion

Our examination of MSPB's mission performance, employee protections, and working environment began 4 months after the swearing-in of MSPB's current chairman and therefore covered a transitional period for the agency. Regarding mission performance and employee protections, indications were that MSPB's new management is pursuing policies and initiatives that are in accord with relevant standards and with the needs of its customers and employees. Management has taken several actions to provide employee protections and to promote a working environment based on trust, respect, and fairness. However, MSPB employees had mixed perceptions of the impartiality of the workplace and of management's success in improving the work environment. We believe the eventual impact on MSPB's employees of management's actions will become clearer after the current chairman has been in office for a longer period of time, and the process of reorganizing and reengineering the agency's operations has been completed.

Agency Comments

In a letter dated July 14, 1995, MSPB's chairman provided comments on a draft of this report. The chairman said that our report, on the whole, was thorough and thoughtfully presented. He did not express any disagreement with its findings and conclusions. His comments consisted of apprising us that (1) processing time for petitions for review on merit cases improved during the first half of fiscal year 1995 (a time period that was outside the scope of our review); and (2) while the report states that OGC will contract out audits, it may also be prudent for OGC, under the current fiscal environment, to arrange for Board personnel to perform some audits in situations where appropriate safeguards can be established. The chairman also recommended a technical change that we made where appropriate. The chairman's comments are presented in their entirety in appendix VI.

We are sending copies of this report to the Chairmen of the Merit Systems Protection Board, the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs, and the House Committee on Governmental Reform and Oversight. Copies will be made available to others upon request.

Annotated Survey on the Appellate Process of the U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board

United States General Accounting Office

Survey on the Appellate Process of the U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board

Introduction

The U.S. General Accounting Office (GAO), an independent agency of Congress, is reviewing the U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) at the request of the Chairmen of the House Subcommittee on Civil Service and the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs. The purpose of this survey is to obtain your views on certain aspects of the MSPB appellate process that are of interest to the committees. Your frank and honest answers will help GAO advise the committees on the MSPB appellate process and the need, if any, to change it. The committees are interested in these aspects of the appellate process:

- MSPB's mission accomplishment and fairness of the appellate process,
- time limits for filing appeals,
- case processing standards, and
- alternative dispute resolution practices.

We are sending this questionnaire to:

- general counsels of federal agencies,
- federal agency attorneys/advocates,
- employee and labor-management relations representatives in federal agencies,
- private attorneys representing appellants, and
- union officials representing appellants.

To obtain different perspectives on MSPB's appellate process, we would appreciate receiving individual responses from each representative. We would like you to focus on your experiences with MSPB's operations since October 1991.

Your responses will be kept confidential and will not be released outside GAO, unless compelled by law to do so or required to do so by the Congress. While the results are generally provided in summary form, individual answers may be discussed in our report, but they will not include any information that could be used to identify individual respondents. The questionnaire is numbered only to aid us in our follow-up efforts and will not be used to identify you with your response. The link between you and your response will be destroyed before the report is issued.

The questionnaire can be completed in about 20 minutes. Space has been provided at the end of the questionnaire, and additional pages may be added, for any comments you may want to make.

Please return the completed questionnaire in the enclosed pre-addressed envelope within 10 days of receipt. If the envelope is misplaced, the return address is:

Thank you for your cooperation and assistance.

DEFINITIONS

Regional level - Under MSPB regulations, an employee must initially file an appeal of an agency personnel decision with one of MSPB's 11 regional offices. At the regional level, an administrative judge will hear and decide the employee's appeal. In this survey, the appellate process that is carried out at MSPB's 11 regional offices is referred to as the regional level.

Headquarters level - Under MSPB regulations, an employee and/or agency may ask the 3-member Board located in Washington, D.C. to review the appeal's decision that was made by an administrative judge in the regional office. In this survey, the appellate process that is carried out by the 3-member Board at its office in Washington, D.C. is referred to as the headquarters level.

II. Mission Accomplishment and Fairness of Appellate Process

MSPB was established by Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1978, which was codified by the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, as an independent, quasi-judicial agency. MSPB's mission is to assure that Federal merit systems are kept free of prohibited personnel practices, employees are protected against abuses by agency management, and executive branch agencies make employment decisions in accordance with merit systems principles. One way MSPB accomplishes its mission is by hearing and deciding employee appeals from agency personnel actions.

III. Time Limits For Filing Appeals

MSPB requires that an appeal of an agency personnel action, such as removal from employment or suspension for more than 14 days, be filed with the appropriate regional office within 20 days of the action's effective date. MSPB requires that a petition to review a regional office administrative judge decision be filed with the Clerk of the Board within 35 days after the regional office decision is issued. If these time frames are not met, MSPB may dismiss the appeal or the petition to review the regional office decision as untimely filed, and not decide the appeal or petition on its merits, unless a good reason for the delay in filing is shown.

IV. Case Processing Standards

MSPB has established standard time frames for processing cases at both the regional (120 days) and Board (110 days) levels. At the regional level, the 120 days begins with receipt of the initial appeal and ends with the issuance of an initial decision. During that time period, the appeal is assigned to an administrative judge, the agency's case file is received, and the discovery process begins. Also, prehearing motions are filed, attempts are made to achieve settlement, and a hearing may be held.

At the Board headquarters level, the 110 days begins with the filing of the petition for review by the appellant or agency. The case file is received from the regional office and reviewed. The 110 day period ends with the issuance of a final Board decision.

We are interested in (1) how satisfied or dissatisfied in general you are with these standard time frames for processing cases; (2) how satisfied or dissatisfied you are with the actual amount of time MSPB has taken to process and decide cases at the regional and headquarters level; (3) whether you believe MSPB should revise its standard time frames; and (4) what would be a reasonable standard for MSPB to process and decide cases.

21. How satisfied or dissatisfied are you with MSPB's standard time frames for administrative judges and board members to decide cases at the regional (120 days) and headquarters (110 days) levels, respectively? (Check one box in each row.)

V. Alternative Dispute Resolution Practices

Broadly defined, alternative dispute resolution is any process that disputing parties use to resolve a disagreement other than a formal process such as court or administrative proceedings. MSPB has incorporated alternative dispute resolution into the appellate process by requiring administrative judges to order the parties to discuss the possibility of voluntarily settling their dispute. With the parties' approval, the administrative judge may participate in the settlement discussions.

30. Consider all the cases with which you have had experience with MSPB since October 1991 (See Question 1). In about how many cases, if any, have you had experience where an administrative judge participated (encouraged, discussed terms of settlement, etc.) in the settlement discussions? (Enter number and continue to Question 31. If none, check box below and then skip to Question 32.) N = 551

Survey of U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board Employees' Attitudes and Views About Their Work Environment

Introduction

The U.S. General Accounting Office (GAO), an independent agency of Congress, is reviewing the U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) at the request of the Chairman, Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs and the Chairman, Subcommittee on Civil Service, House Post Office and Civil Service Committee. As part of this review, we are surveying all MSPB employees to get their views on the work environment in general and MSPB's efforts to (1) foster a work environment that is based on trust, respect, and fairness; (2) ensure that its employees work in an environment that is free of discrimination; and (3) create a climate that encourages reporting of waste, fraud, abuse, and mismanagement. We also ask for views on the reasonableness of MSPB's standard time frames for processing and deciding cases.

Your frank and honest answers will help GAO inform the committees on how MSPB employees view their work environment and the agency's equal employment opportunity (EEO) operations. Your responses will be kept confidential and will not be released outside GAO, unless compelled by law or required by Congress to do so. While the results are generally provided in summary form, individual answers may be discussed in our report, but they will not include any information that could be used to identify individual respondents. The questionnaire is numbered only to aid us in our follow-up efforts and will not be used to identify you with your response. The link between you and your response will be destroyed before the report is issued.

The questionnaire should take about 20 to 30 minutes to complete. Space has been provided at the end of the questionnaire for any comments you may want to make. Additional pages may be added if necessary.

Please complete and return the questionnaire in the enclosed preaddressed envelope within 10 working days to avoid costly follow-up efforts. In the event the envelope is misplaced, the return address is:

Scope and Methodology

MSPB's Appeals Process

To assess whether MSPB is accomplishing its statutory mission through the appeals process in a fair and timely manner, we (1) developed a questionnaire and mailed it in April 1994 to individuals who had experience as practitioners with MSPB's process for adjudicating federal employees' appeals of agency personnel actions during the 2-year period ending September 1993; (2) analyzed its case processing performance reports to determine whether MSPB abided by its own guidelines in processing cases during fiscal years 1991 through 1994 at the regional and headquarters levels; and (3) analyzed data on the extent to which MSPB's final decisions were appealed to and affirmed by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit during fiscal years 1991 through 1994.

In analyzing the case processing performance reports, we did not verify them to source documents but did review available MSPB information on the reliability of the case management system from which the reports were generated. For example, we identified various MSPB systemwide controls used to ensure the accuracy and reliability of appeals case data. We also identified and reviewed three data verification studies performed by MSPB's management analysis group. We did not review appeals cases to determine whether the process was carried out fairly or resulted in well-reasoned decisions.

Questionnaire Objectives and Development

We mailed a total of 1,179 questionnaires on April 27, 1994, to appeals process practitioners asking for their views on (1) how successful MSPB has been in accomplishing its mission through the appeals process, (2) the fairness of the appeals process, and (3) the time limits for filing and processing appeals. The practitioners included (1) general counsels of federal agencies, (2) federal agency attorneys and representatives, (3) employee and labor-management relations representatives in federal agencies, (4) private attorneys representing appellants, and (5) union officials representing appellants.

The questionnaire was designed by a social science survey specialist in conjunction with GAO evaluators who were knowledgeable about MSPB's appeals process. We pretested the questionnaire with members of each of the five participant groups to determine if (1) the respondents possessed the information desired; (2) the questionnaire would be burdensome to the respondents; and (3) the questionnaire design, including such elements as the type size, layout, and procedures for recording the information, was appropriate. Any problems with the questionnaire that were identified by the pretest process were corrected. We also provided the questionnaire to MSPB for review and incorporated the agency's comments as appropriate. After the questionnaires were completed and returned by survey respondents, the questionnaires were edited. Three data verification procedures were used. All data were double-keyed and verified during data entry. A random sample of these data was verified back to the source questionnaires. Also, computerized logic checks were run to look for incorrect data; any errors that were found were corrected.

Sampling Methodology

The total population of the 5 participant groups was 5,015 individuals; 1,179 of these 5,015 individuals were mailed questionnaires. Questionnaires were mailed to all persons in the general counsel (83) and employee and labor-management relations representative groups (98). Federal agency general counsels were identified and selected from agency general counsels listed in the Federal Yellow Book, Winter 1994. Employee and labor-management relations representatives in federal agencies were selected from a membership listing of OPM's Interagency Advisory Group Committee on Employee and Labor-Management Relations.

We sent questionnaires to a total sample of 998 individuals who made up the remaining 3 groups of appeals process participants—federal agency attorneys and representatives (492), private attorneys (368), and union officials (138). Federal agency attorneys and representatives, private attorneys, and union officials were selected from MSPB's lists of individuals who represented federal employees or agencies before MSPB sometime during fiscal year 1992 or fiscal year 1993; because of the large number of individuals included in these lists, we randomly sampled from the three groups.

Table III.1 presents the population sizes and the original and revised sample sizes for each of the five participant groups that were mailed questionnaires on April 27, 1994.

Appendix III
Scope and Methodology

<sup>b</sup>Figures represent the sample of persons mailed questionnaires minus those who indicated on returned questionnaires that they had not had personnel appeals cases experience with MSPB since October 1991.

Questionnaire Response Rate

Of the 1,179 questionnaires we mailed in April 1994, 206 questionnaires were returned by individuals who indicated they had not had personnel appeals case experience with MSPB since October 1991 and thus were deemed ineligible for our sample. These individuals were dropped from our original population of individuals, resulting in a revised survey sample size of 973 questionnaires for our 5 participant groups. Those individuals who did not respond were sent a second questionnaire mailing on June 8, 1994, and a final questionnaire mailing on August 4, 1994. As a result of these 3 mailings, we received 676 completed and useable questionnaires, for a response rate of 69 percent. Table III.2 summarizes the questionnaire returns for the revised survey sample size of 973.

Population Estimates From the Sample Results and Sampling Error

The results obtained from our sampling methodology allow us to make observations about each group’s experience in representing clients before MSPB. Our sample results can be projected to the populations for three of the five groups who have had experience representing clients before MSPB—federal agency attorneys and representatives, private attorneys, and union officials representing appellants. The other two groups—employee and labor-management relations representatives and general counsels of federal agencies—were not sampled; instead, the populations of individuals in these two groups were mailed questionnaires.

Because our survey selected a sample or portion of the population of agency attorneys and representatives, private attorneys, and union representatives, the review results obtained are subject to some uncertainty, or sampling error. The sampling error consists of two parts—confidence level and confidence interval. The confidence level indicates the degree of confidence that can be placed in the estimates derived from the sample. The confidence interval is the upper and lower limit between which the actual population estimate may be found.

We chose the specific sample sizes for each of the three groups so that the confidence interval, based on a 100-percent response rate, would not be greater than plus or minus 5 percent at the 95-percent level of confidence. However, because the useable questionnaire response rate was less than 100 percent and varied for each of the three practitioner groups we sampled, the confidence intervals were generally larger than plus or minus 5 percent.

We calculated the confidence intervals only for the sampled groups' responses to the three survey questions on MSPB's success in accomplishing its mission and the fairness of its appellate process, which we presented earlier in tables 1, 2, and 3. In calculating the confidence intervals, we assumed that for each of the three practitioner sample groups the reported percentage of practitioners responding to the three survey questions was near 50 percent, which may result in larger confidence intervals. The confidence intervals are smaller when the actual reported percentages approach 100 percent and 0 percent. For example, the 90 percent of agency attorneys and representatives who responded that MSPB's appellate process was fair at the headquarters level had a confidence interval of plus or minus 4 percent, as compared to a confidence interval of plus or minus 6 percent if 50 percent had responded that the process was fair.

Table III.4 shows what the confidence intervals for each of the sampled groups would have been if the reported percentage of practitioners responding to the three questions had been near 50 percent.

Table III.4: Confidence Intervals for GAO's Analysis of Sampled Participants' Views of MSPB's Success in Accomplishing Its Mission and the Fairness of Its Appellate Process

Sampled group	Confidence intervals <sup>a</sup> for participants' views on:
	MSPB's success in mission accomplishment	Fairness of MSPB's appellate process at the regional level	Fairness of MSPB's appellate process at the headquarters' level
Agency attorneys and representatives	5%	5%	6%
Private attorneys	9	8	12
Union officials	11	11	17

<sup>a</sup>The confidence intervals are stated as a plus or minus percent with a confidence level of 95 percent.

MSPB's Accountability Mechanisms

To determine what accountability mechanisms MSPB had in place to provide its employees the merit system protections that MSPB was created to uphold, we reviewed the agency's EEO and internal oversight activities designed to protect its employees against workplace discrimination, mismanagement, abuse, and improper personnel practices. We also sought MSPB employees' views on selected aspects of the agency's EEO operations and internal oversight activities by mailing a questionnaire to all MSPB employees. A more detailed discussion of the questionnaire development and its mailing is presented later in this appendix.

As discussed and agreed with your office, we did not review (1) MSPB's affirmative employment program for recruiting, hiring, advancing, and placing minorities, women, and other protected groups; or (2) how well audits and investigations were performed by MSPB's former OIG. We also did not review appeal cases of MSPB employees to determine whether the process was carried out fairly and resulted in well-reasoned decisions.

MSPB's EEO Operations

In reviewing MSPB's EEO operations, we focused on (1) training received during fiscal years 1992 and 1993 by MSPB managers and supervisors to make them aware of their EEO responsibilities and by EEO staff in carrying out the agency's EEO functions; (2) policies and procedures in place to evaluate and reward managers and supervisors on their EEO performance; and (3) actions MSPB has taken to communicate its EEO policy, program, and complaint process to its employees and to make them aware of their rights under the EEO complaint process. We reviewed MSPB's EEO manual and collected and analyzed data for fiscal years 1990 through 1994 on the number of employees who had received EEO counseling or filed formal EEO complaints. We also reviewed MSPB's performance management manual and collected data for fiscal years 1991 through 1994 on the number of employees who had received the Chairman's Award for Excellence in EEO.

MSPB's Internal Oversight Activities

We interviewed MSPB officials to determine what measures agency management has taken, since abolishing its nonstatutory OIG in February 1994, to provide audit and investigative coverage of its programs and operations. We examined whether these measures would enable MSPB to conduct audits and investigations in compliance with requirements established by the Office of Management and Budget and the President's Council on Integrity and Efficiency.

We also compared MSPB's measures for carrying out its internal oversight activities with those of 10 other federal entities (see app. IV). Specifically, we compared the entities' capabilities to provide audits and investigations, the offices responsible for handling allegations of wrong-doing, arrangements for obtaining investigative and audit services, and the types of audits provided. We judgmentally selected these 10 entities because they were roughly comparable to MSPB in budget and staff size. As agreed with your office, we did not review how well audits and investigations were performed by MSPB's former OIG.

MSPB's Vision Statement

To determine what actions MSPB has taken to foster a work environment that is based on trust, respect, and fairness, as called for in its 1992 vision statement, we interviewed MSPB's Chief Operating Officer, EEO director, and members of a task force charged with proposing actions for implementing MSPB's vision. We also used our previously mentioned MSPB employee questionnaire to solicit employees' views on their agency's success in fostering an environment based on trust, respect, and fairness. Lastly, we compared the workplace views of MSPB employees with those of federal employees in general. We did this by reviewing a May 1992 OPM special report entitled "Survey of Federal Employees," which contained data on federal employees' attitudes towards their jobs, their supervisors, and their organizations. OPM had distributed this questionnaire to 56,767 federal employees.

MSPB Employee Questionnaire Objectives and Development

We mailed our questionnaire to all individuals employed by MSPB as of May 12, 1994, asking for their views on MSPB's efforts to (1) carry out its EEO operations and ensure that its employees work in a discrimination-free environment; (2) create a climate that encourages reporting of waste, fraud, abuse, and mismanagement; and (3) foster a work environment that is based on trust, respect, and fairness. We also asked employees who were involved in the processing of cases at the regional and headquarters levels for their views on the reasonableness of MSPB's guidelines regarding time frames for processing and deciding cases. These employees included the regional administrative judges, attorneys in MSPB's Offices of the Appeals Counsel and the General Counsel, attorneys on the board members' personal staffs, and the board members. The Chairman was not included.

The questionnaire was first mailed on May 25, 1994, to all MSPB employees. On July 7, 1994, we sent a second copy of the questionnaire to those who did not respond to our first mailing. On August 1, 1994, we sent a third copy of the questionnaire to those who still had not responded.

The questionnaire was designed by a social science survey specialist in conjunction with GAO evaluators who were knowledgeable about MSPB's EEO and internal oversight operations. Before mailing our questionnaire, we pretested it with 10 MSPB employees who held various job titles and were assigned to either an MSPB regional office or to various offices within MSPB headquarters. The pretest helped to ensure that our questions would be interpreted correctly and that the respondents would be willing to provide the information required. We also provided the questionnaire to MSPB for review and incorporated the agency's comments as appropriate. After the questionnaires were received from survey respondents, the surveys were edited. Three data verification procedures were used. All data were double-keyed and verified during data entry. A random sample of these data was verified back to the source questionnaires. Also, computerized logic checks were run to look for incorrect data, and any errors detected were corrected.

Questionnaire Response Rate

A total of 301 employees were mailed the questionnaire, but 2 employees were later dropped from the our original population because they were not employed with MSPB as of May 12, 1994. Of the 299 eligible employees in our universe, 240 of them returned useable questionnaires to us, for a response rate of 80 percent. Table III.5 summarizes the questionnaire returns for the 299 eligible MSPB employees who were mailed questionnaires.

Table III.5: Questionnaire Returns

Types of returns	Number	Percent
Useable returns	240	80
Delivered but not returned	56	19
Returned not completed or unuseable	3	1
Total	299	100

Nonsampling Errors on Both Questionnaires

In addition to the sampling errors of the kind discussed earlier for the MSPB appeals process questionnaire, the practical difficulties of conducting any survey may introduce other types of errors, commonly referred to as nonsampling errors. For example, differences in how a particular question is interpreted by the survey respondents could introduce unwanted variability into the survey's results. We took steps in the development of each questionnaire, the data collection, and the data analysis to minimize nonsampling errors. These steps, such as pretesting and editing the questionnaires, have been discussed in previous sections of this appendix.

Figures and Tables on Selected MSPB Employee Survey Results

Based on situations that they either had personally experienced or had seen or heard occurred at MSPB during the past 2 years, 24 percent of the respondents to our employee questionnaire described the MSPB work environment as either somewhat discriminatory or very discriminatory. The discriminatory acts that respondents perceived to have taken place most often involved employees being hired, assigned to jobs, or formally recognized or rewarded primarily because of their race or sex. As figure V.1 shows, more women than men and more minority than nonminority employees described the work environment at MSPB as discriminatory. Women and minorities were 61 percent and 32 percent of MSPB's workforce, respectively, at the time we initiated our survey.

As shown in table V.1, most employees responding to our survey believed that since MSPB announced its vision statement in November 1992, they have been treated fairly in decisions regarding job assignments, training, formal ratings, monetary awards and bonuses, promotion or career advancement, and nonmonetary awards and recognition. However, employees' responses regarding these decisions varied with their gender, nonminority/minority status, and position as shown in tables V.2 through V.4.

Figures V.2 through V.4 show how employees' perceptions of MSPB's success in fostering an environment of trust, respect, and fairness in the workplace varied with their gender, nonminority/minority status, and duty station. More women (47 percent) than men (26 percent), more minorities (42 percent) than nonminorities (37 percent), and more headquarters (42 percent) than nonheadquarters (34 percent) employees indicated they believed that MSPB had been unsuccessful in fostering such an environment.

Comments From the Merit Systems Protection Board

THE CHAIRMAN

U.S. MERIT SYSTEMS PROTECTION BOARD
1120 Vermont Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20419

July 14, 1995

Mr. L. Nye Stevens
Director
Federal Management and Workforce Issues
U.S. General Accounting Office
Washington, D.C. 20548

Dear Mr. Stevens:

I appreciate the opportunity to comment on the draft of the August 1995 report on the Merit Systems Protection Board. The report is on the whole objective, thorough and thoughtfully presented. The Board will take your recommendations into account as we strive to become even more effective and efficient.

I am pleased to advise you that since the period covered by the report, we have improved the processing time for headquarters cases by 30 percent. For the first half of FY 1995, the overall average processing time for petitions for review on merits cases was 119 days, down from an average of 170 days for the four preceding fiscal years. We also increased the percentage of cases decided within our 110-day goal to 73 percent in the first half of FY 1995, up from an average of 65 percent for the four preceding fiscal years. These improvements illustrate that we are serving our customers better.

In the section on the Board's new oversight policies and procedures, the report notes that the Office of General Counsel (OGC) is responsible for program and operations audits. The report states that OGC will contract for audits with private firms or through interagency agreements. It may also be prudent, especially in the current fiscal environment, for OGC to arrange for Board personnel to perform some audits in situations where appropriate safeguards can be established.

As a final technical note, the Merit Systems Protection Board is constituted by statute as a Board, rather than as a Board of Directors as indicated on page three of the draft report.

Thank you for your efforts to assist in improving the civil service adjudication system.

Chairman
