Chair, Subcommittee on VA, HUD, and Independent Agencies
Committee on Appropriations
United States Senate

Dear Madam Chair:

This fact sheet, prepared at your request, discusses the Department of Housing and Urban Development's (HUD) multifamily housing stock that is eligible for incentives under either title II of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 or title VI of the National Housing Affordability Act of 1990. These incentives are offered to preserve this housing for lower-income households. This fact sheet details the characteristics of these projects, such as their number and location, and also identifies separately those projects whose owners have filed for incentives. Also discussed is the cost of the incentives provided to project owners as of September 30, 1993, the end of the most recent fiscal year for which data are available. We will report separately on the reasonableness of HUD's model used to estimate the future funding needed to preserve this housing.

The owners of certain multifamily housing projects developed during the 1960s and 1970s with government assistance are eligible to prepay their mortgage after 20 years. Prepayment could result in the termination of federal use restrictions that are designed to maintain this housing for lower-income households. Faced with the threat of losing a large number of housing units through prepayment, the Congress enacted the aforementioned legislation, which provides project owners with incentives that guarantee these units for lower-income families for the remainder of the projects' useful life. Incentives, such as allowing an owner to withdraw equity from a project through a second insured mortgage, provide the owner compensation in return for extending the project's use restrictions. To pay for such incentives, HUD can allow owners to increase a project's rent. These increases in turn are usually paid by HUD to project owners through additional rental subsidies under its Section 8 program.<sup>1</sup>

The preservation process begins when an owner files a notice of intent to participate. The notice states whether the owner plans to extend the project's use restrictions or transfer the project to a qualified purchaser who will maintain the restrictions. In rare situations, the owner will prepay the mortgage and terminate the restrictions. Following the filing of the notice of intent, the owner develops a plan of action that, once approved by HUD, generally results in the preservation of the project.

In summary, our analysis of the preservation program through September 30, 1993, provides the following information:

Characteristics of Eligible Projects

- Through the year 2021, the owners of 3,555 projects with 385,024 units will be eligible to prepay their mortgage and participate in the program. Almost 2,000 of these projects, containing more than 55 percent of the housing units, were already eligible for prepayment. By fiscal year 1997, over 95 percent of the units will be eligible.
- Projects currently eligible for the program are distributed throughout every state in the country. However, 10 states have over 53 percent of the eligible housing units, with California alone accounting for 11 percent of the nationwide total. Further, 59 cities have over 1,000 eligible housing units. Together, these cities contain about 35 percent of the units eligible for preservation. Los Angeles, Chicago, and Dallas represent the top three cities, with over 25,000 units combined.

Projects Whose Owners Have Filed for Incentives

- The owners of 781 projects with 90,104 units have already filed a notice with HUD to participate in the program. Over 98 percent of these owners indicated an intention to (1) retain their project and extend the use restrictions preserving the project for lower-income households or (2) sell their project to a qualified purchaser who is also required to retain the restrictions.
- Of the 781 projects for which a notice has been filed, 132 projects containing 19,810 units have been approved for preservation. On average, it took about 17 months from the time the owners of these projects filed a notice until HUD's approval. Tracking this interval is useful in estimating funding needs.

Cost of the Incentives Provided

- In preserving the 19,810 units, HUD reserved about $432 million for incentives.<sup>2</sup> The Congress, however, appropriated approximately $1.1 billion for fiscal years 1991 through 1993 for preservation. Since this

<sup>2</sup>According to HUD officials, appropriated funds are reserved, or held aside, once they are earmarked for a specific purpose. However, these funds are not considered obligated until an agreement or contract, such as one for Section 8 funding, is executed.

money is considered "no-year" funds, it remains available to HUD year after year until it has been obligated. As of the end of fiscal year 1993, over $540 million remained unreserved.

Section 1 of this fact sheet contains specific details on HUD's stock of projects eligible for prepayment and the distribution of these projects throughout the country. Section 2 discusses the 781 projects for which a notice to participate has been filed. This section also discusses the 132 projects approved for preservation, along with the time period it has taken to process the applications for them. Section 3 provides information on the cost associated with preserving the approximately 19,800 housing units in the 132 projects.

This fact sheet relies on information maintained by HUD's Office of Preservation, which maintains a data base on projects eligible for preservation and activities associated with these projects. Using this data base, we developed a profile of these projects. We did not independently verify the accuracy of the data contained in the data base except in cases in which we found obvious errors or inconsistencies in the data. In such situations, we contacted either HUD's Preservation Office or the appropriate HUD field office to correct the errors or resolve the inconsistencies. In addition, we provided HUD's Preservation Office a listing of the errors so that officials could make the necessary corrections to the data base. We performed our review between August 1993 and March 1994.

We discussed the contents this fact sheet with officials at HUD's Office of Preservation and HUD's Office of Budget. They generally agreed with the information presented but suggested specific clarifications, which we incorporated where appropriate.

We are sending copies of this fact sheet to other interested Senate and House committees and subcommittees; interested Members of Congress; the Secretary of HUD; the Director, Office of Management and Budget; and other interested parties.

HUD's Multifamily Housing Stock Eligible for Preservation

The private owners of certain assisted housing units developed during the 1960s and 1970s under section 221(d)(3) of the National Housing Act and section 236 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 have the option to prepay their federally subsidized 40-year mortgage after 20 years.<sup>3</sup>

In many cases, such prepayment could remove restrictions that reserve the units for lower-income households and could displace thousands of these households. Concerned about the possible loss of these units, the Congress enacted the Emergency Low-Income Housing and Preservation Act of 1987 (also known as title II or ELIHPA) as a temporary measure until a permanent program to preserve these units could be enacted. Subsequently, in 1990, title II was effectively replaced by the Low-Income Housing Preservation and Resident Homeownership Act (also known as title VI or LIHPRHA) to ensure that most of these units remain available and affordable to lower-income families and that the current owners are fairly compensated.<sup>4</sup>

Where HUD's Preservation Eligible Housing Stock Is Located

As of September 30, 1993, the number of projects subject to prepayment and eligible to participate in the Department of Housing and Urban Development's (HUD) preservation program—termed “preservation eligible projects”—totaled 3,555, containing 385,024 housing units.<sup>5</sup> Excluding 31 state noninsured projects with 7,533 units, the remaining 3,524 projects with 377,491 units represent almost 62 percent of the assisted 221(d)(3) and 236 insured multifamily housing units developed nationwide. The other 38 percent (226,969 units) were ineligible because of one or more disqualifying factors.<sup>6</sup> Of those units eligible for preservation, a majority were developed under section 236, as illustrated in figure 1.1.

<sup>3</sup>Section 221(d)(3) of the National Housing Act, enacted in 1961, insures multifamily rental housing units developed from 1961 through 1968 for moderate-income families. Subsequently, section 236 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 allowed for the development of multifamily rental housing aimed at reducing the mortgage interest cost to the owner and providing low-income tenants with affordable housing.

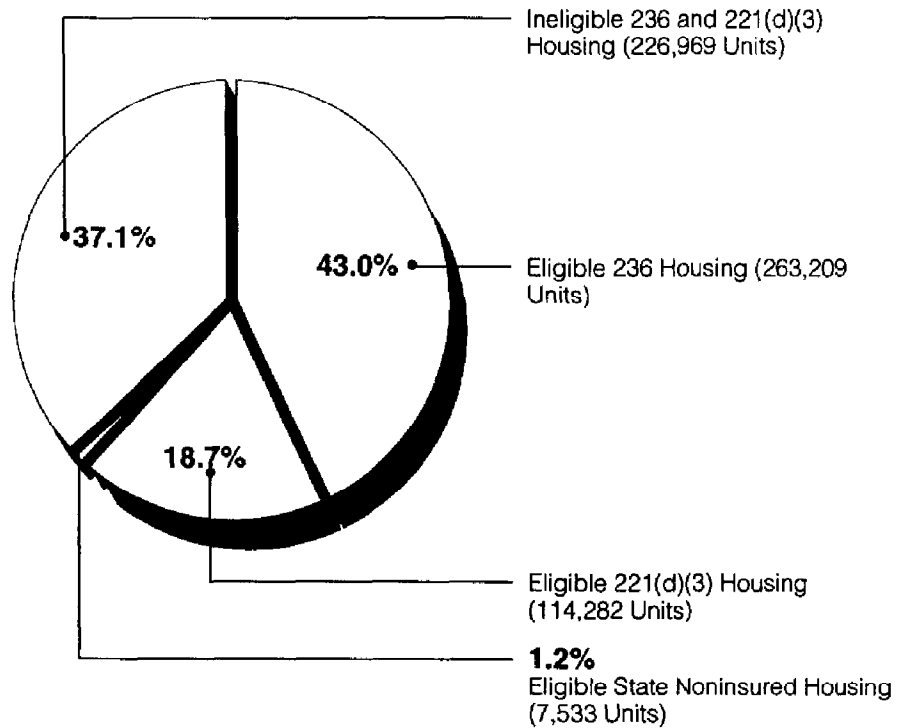

<sup>4</sup>Section 613(b) of title VI also allows other projects, such as those developed by state housing finance agencies, for which the note is prepaid to participate in the preservation program. These projects, known as state noninsured projects, are added to the inventory after being submitted by a state agency and eligibility is verified by the Department of Housing and Community Development.

<sup>5</sup>HUD officials told us that minor variations in the number of projects may exist at any given time as projects are found to be eligible or ineligible for preservation.

<sup>6</sup>A project is ineligible from participating in the preservation program if it was developed by a nonprofit organization, if the owner defaulted on its mortgage, or if the owner received a subsidy that precludes prepayment and extends the project's use restrictions for its remaining useful life.

in the Total Housing Stock, by Program

Because there is no centralized listing of state noninsured projects that may be eligible under section 613(b) of title VI, HUD adds these projects to its list of preservation stock only after they are submitted by a state to HUD and verified by HUD as eligible. These state noninsured units represent a relatively small portion of the total housing stock eligible for preservation—1.2 percent consisting of 7,533 units distributed among 31 projects. According to officials in HUD's Policy, Development, and Research Office, state noninsured projects may exist in about 10 to 20 states; however, only 3 states thus far have submitted and received eligibility approval for the 31 projects. Massachusetts and New York reportedly have the highest number of state noninsured projects; yet these two states have submitted only 24 and 3 projects, respectively, with 6,948 units. Officials from both states have stated that they do not plan to submit any more projects for preservation.<sup>7</sup> The only other state to submit state noninsured projects is Michigan, with four projects containing 585 units.

Section 1

Distribution of Projects by State

Projects eligible for prepayment tend to be concentrated in a number of specific states and cities. Accordingly, HUD's preservation program is especially critical in preventing the loss of low-income housing units in these locations. Geographically, over 53 percent of the preservation eligible housing units are concentrated in just 10 states—California, Texas, Ohio, Massachusetts, Florida, Virginia, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Michigan, and New York. One state—California—contains the highest number of such projects and housing units—477 and 42,712, respectively. This one state has over 11 percent of the nation's preservation eligible units which is almost double the number in the state with the next highest number—Texas. The distribution of units and projects by states is illustrated in table 1.1.

Nationwide, the number of units in these projects ranged from 1,213 units in a Massachusetts state noninsured project to 5 units in a project in California and another in Maryland. The average number of units per project was 108, with the median being 96. Appendix I lists HUD's stock of preservation eligible projects, as recorded in its data base as of September 30, 1993.

When Projects Become Eligible for Prepayment

The owners of HUD's preservation eligible multifamily housing stock can prepay over a 39-year period—1982 to 2021.<sup>8</sup> At the end of fiscal year 1993, approximately 55 percent of the units (212,583) were already eligible for prepayment. By the end of fiscal year 1995, about 86 percent will be eligible for prepayment, and by 1997, over 95 percent. However, even though a project's mortgage may reach its prepayment date, that does not necessarily mean that the owner will file a notice to participate in the preservation program. This decision, at the owner's sole discretion, can be influenced by a variety of factors, such as the economy or the value of the property. Once projects are eligible, however, there is no time limit for project owners to apply for incentives under the preservation program. Therefore, as projects become eligible each fiscal year, the cumulative number of projects whose owners could apply for incentives under the preservation program at any given time may be significant depending on whether or not owners decide to apply. (See fig. 1.3.)

<sup>8</sup>Although the 236 program terminated in 1975, some projects were not built or completed until the late 1970s or early 1980s. Further, a number of other projects either have specific prepayment dates contained in their mortgage that superseded the standard criterion of 20 years or had a delayed final endorsement date (usually the closing date) for a variety of reasons, such as environmental problems with the site that remained unresolved for years. As a result, for some projects the date on which prepayment is allowed is well into the next century.

Housing Projects Participating in HUD's Preservation Program

To participate in the preservation program, owners of low-income housing projects who are eligible to prepay their mortgage are required to file a notice of intent (NOI) with HUD. Among other information included in the NOI, the applicant must indicate one of three options for the project.<sup>9</sup> These options include

- extending a project's use restrictions reserving the housing for lower-income people,
- transferring the housing to a qualified purchaser who will retain the use restrictions, or
- terminating the use restrictions.

Following an established set of procedures and requirements with specific deadlines, eligible projects are processed through the preservation program as specified by law and its related regulations. This process almost invariably results in preserving privately owned low-income housing projects while providing fair compensation to the owners for extending the use restrictions.

Projects Whose Owners Have Filed for Preservation

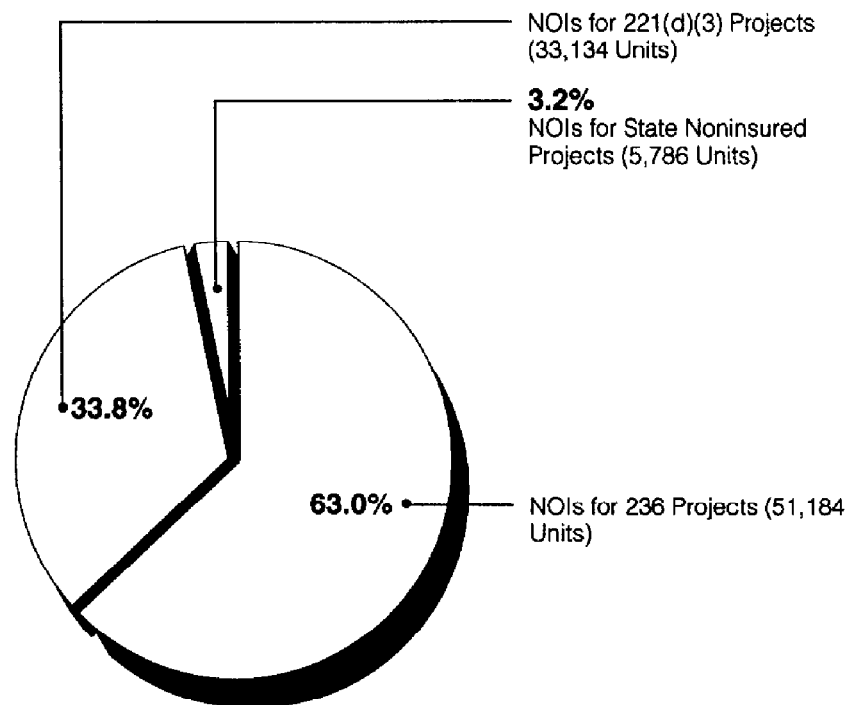

As of September 30, 1993, the owners of about 86 percent (330,121 units in 3,116 projects) of the total number of units were eligible to file an NOI.<sup>10</sup> However, the owners of only 781 projects containing 90,104 units had filed an NOI as of the end of fiscal year 1993. These 90,104 units represent 23 percent of the entire housing stock eligible for the preservation program. Only three states—Massachusetts, New York, and Michigan—had submitted notices for state noninsured projects, specifically, for 25 projects with 5,786 units. The remaining NOIs were distributed among the 221(d)(3) and 236 program projects. Figure 2.1 illustrates the NOIs filed, by housing program.

<sup>9</sup>Prior to the enactment of title VI, project owners who filed an NOI under the title were not required to specify an option.

<sup>10</sup>NOIs can be filed no sooner than 24 months prior to a project's becoming eligible to have its mortgage prepaid. Therefore, the number of units eligible as of September 30, 1993, includes those that will reach their prepayment date in fiscal years 1994 and 1995.

Geographic Distribution of NOIs

Over half of the 90,104 units covered by the NOIs were concentrated in only five states—California, Massachusetts, Washington, Illinois, and Texas—and for some, these units represent a significant portion of the state's units eligible for preservation. For example, owners in Washington had filed NOIs that represent over 59 percent of the state's entire preservation eligible housing stock. On the other hand, as table 2.1 shows, owners in four states—Delaware, Oklahoma, West Virginia, and Wyoming, with a relatively small percentage of the preservation eligible housing stock nationwide—had not filed any NOIs. The percentage of a state's total stock covered by the NOIs filed ranged from a high of 76 percent for Hawaii to a low of 2.3 percent for Ohio.

Further, these 90,104 units were distributed among 449 cities. Almost 24 percent of the units (22,138) were in only 11 cities. Comparing these cities to those having the greatest number of preservation eligible units (see table 1.2) disclosed mixed results. For example, Los Angeles and Chicago were among those cities with the highest number of preservation eligible units as well as among those cities with the largest number of units covered by NOIs. (See table 2.2). However, cities such as Washington, D.C., and Baltimore, Maryland, which also had a relatively large number of preservation eligible units had a comparatively small number—10 to 14 percent, respectively—of these units covered by NOIs.

Filing Time for NOIs

Under the preservation program, owners can file NOIs 24 months in advance of a project's eligibility date for prepayment. However, once the project is eligible, the actual filing of an NOI is at the sole discretion of the owner.<sup>11</sup> As a result, it is not surprising that the time frames under which NOIs have been filed in connection to projects' eligibility dates varied widely. (See fig. 2.2.) Moreover, because of the discretion afforded owners to file NOIs, HUD's task of estimating preservation costs and the Congress's task of budgeting out-year appropriations for the program are difficult.

<sup>11</sup>To receive incentives under title II, an owner would have had to submit an NOI by Jan. 1, 1991.

Section 2
Housing Projects Participating in HUD's
Preservation Program

Note: Zero line represents eligibility date.

The time between the eligibility date and the filing date for the NOI ranged from the maximum of 24 months (729 days) before the eligibility date to more than 5 years (2,104 days) after the eligibility date.<sup>12</sup> For the 459 projects for which NOIs were filed prior to the eligibility date, the NOIs were filed an average of 350 days before the eligibility date. As for the 322 projects for which NOIs were filed after the eligibility date, the average filing time was about 550 days.

<sup>12</sup>For projects that had a prepayment date prior to the preservation legislation, we considered the date of enactment—Nov. 1, 1987—as the date of eligibility for the purpose of our analysis.

Trend in the Number of NOIs Filed

Since the first NOIs were filed in 1988, the number of filings has continually increased. According to HUD's preservation staff, the sharp increase in NOIs under title II in 1991 could possibly be attributed to the uncertainty over how the preservation program would be affected by the passage of title VI in 1990.<sup>13</sup> Since the implementation of title VI in 1992, the number of projects with the option to apply under title II has sharply decreased because of regulatory restrictions. Of the 781 projects for which NOIs were filed, 244 projects representing 36,051 units had the filing occur under title II. For the balance, 537 projects with 54,053 units, the filing was under title VI. The number of NOIs filed and the corresponding units covered by these filings are illustrated in figure 2.3.

<sup>13</sup>Title II differs from title VI in a number of aspects. These differences involve, among other things, filing and processing procedures, the type of incentives, eligibility criteria, time frames, and task-specific objectives.

Section 2
Housing Projects Participating in HUD's
Preservation Program

Notes: Each NOI filed represents one project.

The earliest an NOI could be filed under title VI was fiscal year 1992.

NOIs filed in fiscal year 1991 may include a number of projects for which the filing occurred under a transition rule.

Of the 537 project owners who filed NOIs under title VI, over 98 percent have indicated an intention to either extend the use restrictions for the remaining useful life of the project or sell the project to a qualified purchaser who is required to retain the use restrictions.<sup>14</sup> Of the 244 projects owners who filed under title II, 132 have been approved to extend the use restrictions. Only nine project owners have indicated their intention to prepay the mortgage and terminate the use restrictions, affecting 656 units; however, according to HUD's Preservation Office, as of <sup>14</sup>According to HUD's Preservation Office staff, early in the preservation program, filers under title II did not have to indicate their specific intention when filing an NOI.

September 30, 1993, only one project has been approved to terminate its use restrictions.<sup>15</sup>

Projects Approved for Preservation

As of September 30, 1993, of the 781 projects for which NOIs were filed, only 132 projects (16.9 percent), with 19,810 units, had been approved under the preservation program. All 132 projects have had the use restrictions extended, and the owners have received incentives for extending these restrictions for the remaining useful life of the projects. For these approved projects, the number of units preserved ranged from a high of 601 units for a project in Hyde Park, Massachusetts, to a low of 15 units for a project in Los Angeles, California. On average, 150 units were preserved per project. All of these projects were approved under title II. No projects had been approved under title VI as of September 30, 1993, possibly because regulations implementing this title were not finalized until April 1992. Figure 2.4 shows the number of units approved for preservation, those for which NOIs have been filed, and the total number of eligible units. As the figure shows, the number of NOIs filed almost parallels the number of units becoming eligible for the preservation program each year.

<sup>15</sup>According to HUD's Preservation Office staff, this project was terminated under the preservation program and subsequently removed from their data base of preservation eligible projects.

The 132 projects approved under the preservation program are located in 21 states. A majority of the 19,810 units contained in these projects were in California—63 projects with 8,375 units, or 42.3 percent of the total units approved. This state, combined with Massachusetts, Illinois, and Washington—containing 3,045 units, 2,419 units, and 2,106 units, respectively—accounted for over 80 percent of the units that had been preserved as of September 30, 1993. Time Frames for Approving Projects

Overall, the average number of days between filing an NOI to preservation approval was 545 days, or about 17 months.<sup>16</sup> Time frames between the NOI's submission and approval ranged from 49 days for a 154-unit project in Santee, California, to just over 4-1/2 years (1,690 days) for a 54-unit project in Seattle, Washington. According to HUD's Director of Preservation, the wide differences between processing times from project to project may be attributed to the time it took to resolve conflicts or differences on such issues as project appraisals or the number and amount of incentives an owner should receive. Figure 2.5 shows, by fiscal year, the average time it took from an NOI's submission to the approval of the project for preservation.

<sup>16</sup>The average number of days was computed on 128 projects because we were unable to determine from HUD's data base or from the field offices' files the filing date of the NOI for 4 of the 132 projects.

Knowing the time expended between the filing of the NOI and preservation approval should be useful to HUD in providing the Congress with better estimates of the funding needed year to year for the preservation program.

Cost of Preserving Multifamily Housing Units

The option selected by the project owner under the preservation program—to extend the use restrictions, transfer the project to a qualified owner, or terminate the use restrictions—dictates the incentives available. The owners of nearly every project that had been approved as of September 30, 1993, either extended the use restrictions and received incentives for this extension or transferred the property to a new owner who agreed to retain the use restrictions.<sup>17</sup> Only one project owner prepaid its mortgage and removed the use restrictions. The incentives received for reserving a project are outlined in an agreement called a plan of action that is submitted by the owner and approved by HUD. Once the plan of action is approved, HUD reserves the funds that are needed to pay for the incentives as called for under the plan.

The incentives provide project owners fair compensation for extending projects' use restrictions while providing the necessary funds that allow the units within the projects to remain available and affordable to lower-income families. The cost associated with preserving these projects is directly related to the incentives that the owners receive for extending the projects' use restrictions and any debt service or other operating expenses associated with preserving the projects. To fund these incentives, HUD provides increased rental subsidies to existing Section 8 units in projects and can also authorize additional subsidized units through its Loan Management Set Aside (LMSA) Program. Further, owners can receive flexible subsidies to make capital improvements to their projects as part of their incentives.

Reserving Appropriated Funds

Since 1991, about $1.1 billion has been appropriated to fund HUD's preservation program.<sup>18</sup> However, as of September 30, 1993, only $432.3 million of this amount had been reserved when the plan of action was finalized to fund the preservation of 132 projects with 19,810 units.<sup>19</sup> Because the funds appropriated for the preservation program are considered no-year funds, any balance remaining is carried over from year to year. This amount, according to HUD's Office of Budget, as of the end of <sup>17</sup>By extending the use restrictions, the owner agrees to maintain the project for lower-income families for the remainder of its useful life.

<sup>18</sup>Funding for the preservation program prior to 1991 was not appropriated under its own specific line item.

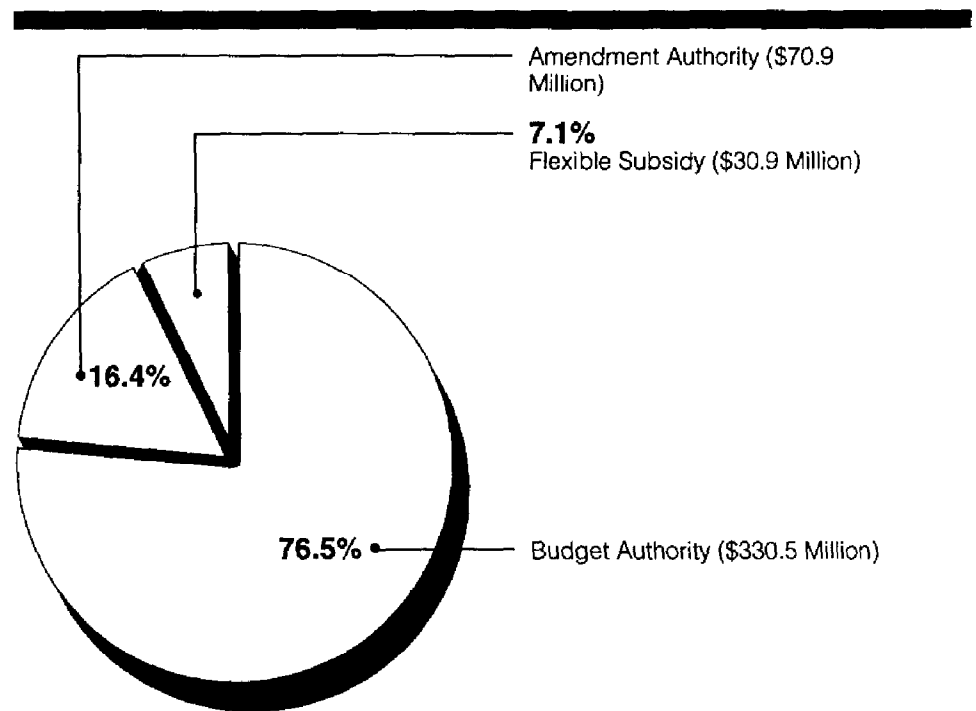

<sup>19</sup>At the end of fiscal year 1993, 10 of the 132 projects approved for preservation had not had funds reserved for them because, according to HUD's Preservation Office staff, unresolved questions remained between HUD and the owners over the final incentive packages. All but one have had funds reserved for them since the end of fiscal year 1993. The remaining project received an incentive that did not require funding to be reserved.

Section 3
Cost of Preserving Multifamily Housing

fiscal year 1993, was about $540 million, or nearly 48 percent of the $1.1 billion appropriated.<sup>20</sup>

HUD's Preservation Office classifies the reserved funds into three categories—budget authority, amendment authority, and flexible subsidy.<sup>21</sup> With approximately 38 percent of the appropriated amount reserved, over $330.5 million, or 76.5 percent of the total reserved, is in the budget authority category to pay for LMSA Section 8 funding. The remaining funding is divided between the amendment authority, with $70.9 million, and the flexible subsidy, with $30.9 million (see fig. 3.1).

<sup>20</sup>According to HUD officials, the $540 million carryover is less than the difference between the $1.1 billion appropriated and the $432 million reserved generally because a large portion of the unreserved funds for 1991 were not carried over for the preservation program.

<sup>21</sup>Funds in these three categories finance the preservation incentives. Specifically, the budget authority covers the cost to fund the new LMSA Section 8 subsidies, while the amendment authority provides additional funding for existing Section 8 subsidies. The flexible subsidy is currently used to fund capital improvements under title II.

Section 3
Cost of Preserving Multifamily Housing
Units

The amount of funds used for the preservation program under each category over 5 fiscal years is further illustrated in table 3.1. As indicated by the table, a majority of the incentives ($330.5 million) have gone to fund LMSAs—subsidies used to fund new Section 8 units for the preserved projects.

Table 3.1: Allocation of Funds Reserved for Projects Approved for Preservation

Fiscal year	Budget authority	Amendment authority	Flexible subsidy	Total dollars

Note: Figures are based on the Preservation Office's records for funds reserved. According to officials in HUD's Preservation Office and the Office of Budget, these figures may not match the official accounting data because of a difference between the time when the Preservation Office reserves the funds and the Office of Budget actually records the reservation.

For the projects that had funds reserved for preservation, the type and amount of funding varied. For example, a project in San Diego received over $15.1 million in LMSA Section 8 budget authority for 394 units in a 504-unit project but did not receive any amendment authority or flexible subsidy. Conversely, another project in Boston received $4.5 million in LMSA Section 8 budget authority for 75 units in a 500-unit project, another $6.7 million in amended Section 8 authority, and $5.4 million in flexible subsidy for a total of $16.6 million in incentives. Table 3.2 summarizes the number of projects that have funds reserved for them under each category and the average cost per unit.

<sup>b</sup>The total figure excludes 10 projects that have been approved for preservation but had not had funds reserved for them.

<sup>c</sup>The number of units preserved with amendment authority was not available as of September 30, 1993.

<sup>f</sup>This calculation was based on 18,234 units because 1,576 units that are contained in the 10 projects did not have funds reserved for them.

The cost of preservation for those projects that have had funds reserved ranged from a low of $155,700 for a 18-unit project located in Mountain View, California, to a high of $15,596,640 for a 500-unit project located in Chicago, Illinois. However, projects on average cost $3.5 million to preserve, with an average cost per unit of $23,708. Even though these data are based on a limited number of projects approved under title II, HUD's Preservation Office believes that these figures are reasonable because projects with higher equity would be more likely to initially apply for preservation incentives. Accordingly, in the future, the Preservation Office expects that as projects with more limited equity apply, program costs should decrease.

Location of and Cost Associated With Preserved Units

Only 21 states had projects approved for preservation. Four states—California, Massachusetts, Illinois, and Washington—had over 80 percent of the units (15,945) approved and account for approximately 79 percent of the new LMSA units (6,795). Table 3.3 provides detailed <sup>a</sup>One preserved project with 52 units did not have funds reserved for incentives as of Sept. 30, 1993.

<sup>b</sup>The average cost was calculated on 2,078 units because 967 units preserved in two projects did not have funds reserved for them as of Sept. 30, 1993.

<sup>c</sup>The average cost was calculated on 56 units because 67 units preserved in two projects did not have funds reserved for them as of Sept. 30, 1993.

<sup>d</sup>The average cost was calculated on 1,616 units because 490 units preserved in five projects did not have funds reserved for them as of Sept. 30, 1993.

<sup>e</sup>The average cost excludes 1,576 units for the 10 projects that were approved for preservation but did not have any funds reserved for them as of Sept. 30, 1993.

Section 3
Cost of Preserving Multifamily Housing
Units

Within these 21 states, the 132 projects preserved were concentrated in only 72 cities. Ten of these cities accounted for about 50 percent of all of units preserved. Chicago, Illinois, had the most units preserved, 2,419 (contained in nine projects), at a cost of $76,853,420—the highest of any city. However, Chicago was 10th in per unit cost—$31,771. Barre, Vermont, had the highest cost per unit, $47,162 for a 120-unit project. Conversely, Tacoma, Washington, had the lowest cost per unit, $1,186 for a 150-unit project. See table 3.4 for a complete listing of the cities that have preserved 19,810 units.

<sup>a</sup>The figures include data for eight localities that are within the city limits of Los Angeles.

<sup>b</sup>The average cost was calculated on 155 units, since one project with 54 units was preserved but had not received any reserved funds as of Sept. 30, 1993.

<sup>c</sup>The average cost was calculated on 101 units, since one project with 130 units was preserved but had not received any reserved funds as of Sept. 30, 1993.

<sup>d</sup>The average cost was calculated on 64 units, since one project with 162 units was preserved but had not received any reserved funds as of Sept. 30, 1993.

<sup>e</sup>The average cost was calculated on 150 units, since one project with 60 units was preserved but had not received any reserved funds as of Sept. 30, 1993.

<sup>f</sup>The average cost was not calculated for these preserved projects because funds had not been reserved as of Sept. 30, 1993.

<sup>g</sup>Calculation was based on 18,234 units because 1,576 units that are contained in 10 projects did not have funds reserved for them.
